

Extrusion is a manufacturing process (thermo) mechanic whereby a compressed material is forced through a channel having the form of the part to be obtained forming a continuously long product (tube, pipe, profiled) and flat (plate, sheet, film).

Extruded aluminum is stronger than a simple sheet of aluminum, but it is still lightweight giving better performance, increased durability, marked fuel economy and minimal maintenance.